Urban Family Medicine: Richard B. Birrer 2012-12-06 The culture and environment in which people live, work and play are an important factor in their health. Many social factors, such as poverty, discrimination, and access to health care, can negatively impact health outcomes. Urban Family Medicine provides a comprehensive overview of the social determinants of health and how they affect individuals and communities. With this in mind, the 2012 edition has been fully updated to reflect the latest research and evidence-based guidelines in urban family medicine. The book features chapters on social determinants of health, community-oriented primary care, and health disparities. It also includes an updated section on the role of the primary care physician in addressing the needs of underserved populations.

Rehabilitation of Older People: Amanda J. Squires 1996 Rehabilitation of older people has become increasingly important in recent years. A growing number of practitioners are recognizing the need for a comprehensive approach to rehabilitation that considers the unique needs and challenges of older adults. This book provides a comprehensive overview of the principles and practices of rehabilitation in the older adult population. It covers a wide range of topics, including falls prevention, stroke rehabilitation, and pain management. The book is written in a user-friendly, accessible format, making it an excellent resource for practitioners in rehabilitation, geriatrics, and primary care.

Counseling Older Adults: John Blando 2014-04-08 Counseling older adults is not equivalent to counseling the general population, and specialized skills and knowledge are required. This book provides an introduction to gerontological counseling, integrating the basic skills of counseling with theories of aging and social work. It covers a range of issues, including grief and loss, aging, and cognitive decline. The book is written in a reader-friendly, accessible format, making it an excellent resource for counselors and other mental health professionals who work with older adults.
